

Guilin Visit - Part 1: Li River Trip

My wife, Gail, and I were tourists visiting Guilin in mid-September 2004, along with several other people. We did a mid-morning trip on the Li River from Guilin to Yangshuo, returning by bus. In the afternoon we visited a beautiful cave near Guilin. In the evening we watched a fishing demonstration using trained cormorant birds. I will show small versions of the photos I took (on 35 mm slide film, scanned at 600 dpi), with supplements of a few photos taken by other Americans in our group.

On the Li River trip I usually took scenery photos. There are a few of the geologic rock formation closeups, some of animals, some of villages. These are sequential, with frame numbers in the order taken during the long boat journey.

11852

11853

11854

11855

11856

11857 of dissolved limestone rocks

11858

11859

11860

11861

11862

11863 water buffalo in water

11864

11865

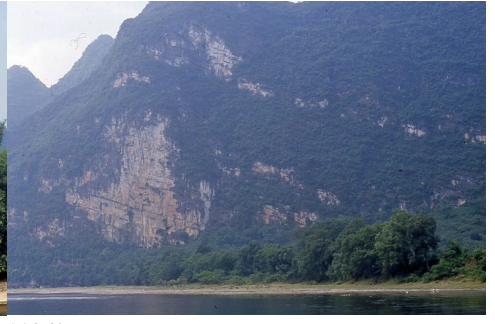

11866 rafts

11867 ramp to village

11868

11869

11870

11871

11872 village entrance

11873 boat, house, tower

11874

11875

11876

11877

11878

11879

11880

11881 classical hill shape, raft

11882

11883

11884

11885 people on beach

11886 raft

11887 village and hill shapes

11888

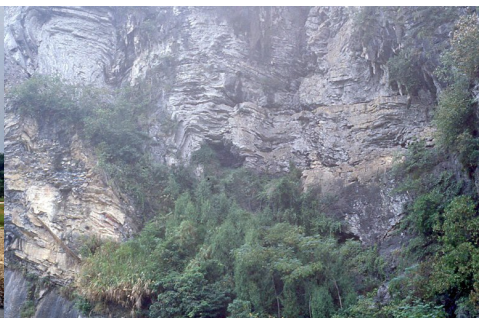

11889

11890 cattle

11891

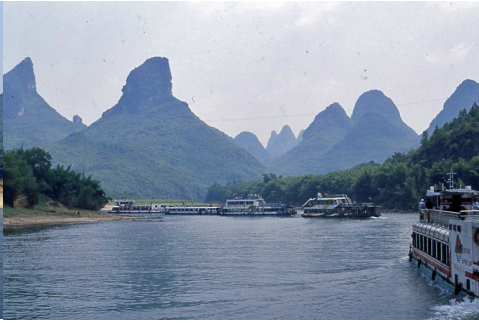

11892 twisted rocks

11893

11894

11895 end of trip

End of Ed's photos of Li River trip.

3 photos by Brenda next:

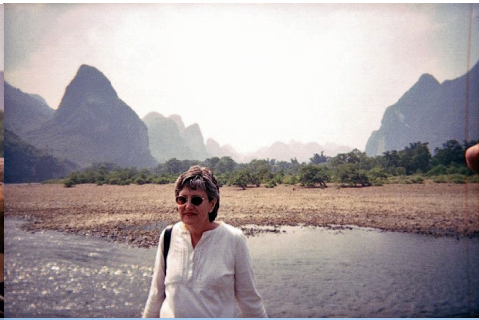

P9110230 some of our group

P9120274

P9120275

2 photos of my wife, Gail, on her camera.

Next are photos by Jim Gu.

9357

9359

9360

9361

9362

9377 Marcus and Jim Gu

9424

9429 at end of river trip

Next are selected photos by Marcus

1347

1348

1353

1354

1355 more group members

1360

1361

1362 Gail (dark hair)

1363

1365

1369

1370

1373

1376

1382

Photos by Takemoto next:

0053

0055

0056

0061

0062

0071 of Punkin, our tour group leader

That should give an idea of what a group of Americans found interesting on this river trip. Some closeup photos of individual people with only minor backgrounds were omitted.

Assembled by Ed Holroyd